RESUME BASICS

The typical ultimate goal of writing a resume is to get an interview. Expanding on this further, a resume is designed to accomplish three major objectives:

1) To introduce yourself to the employer. Be sure you have accurate contact information that you check regularly, which includes mailing address, phone number and email. Highlight your name to make it prominent (use bold type and in a slightly larger font than the rest of the page).

2) To identify and demonstrate your qualifications. A range of educational work, student involvement, volunteer and other activities will demonstrate your qualifications. Tell your "story" as completely and concisely as you can, but be certain to emphasize key skills and accomplishments rather than general descriptions of duties.

3) To entice the recruiter to invite you to an interview. The recipient of the resume should not only be informed after reading the document but should also want to have more conversation with you. A resume that not only answers questions but raises curiosity or has something that encourages the employer to want to find out more can lead to the interview.
